Day six was a very nice one. The day started with a long sleep followed by a brunch. We had nice cheese with typical Swiss bread, eggs and röschti. After brunching, we went to the airport. The original plan of the day was going gliderflying in the Jura mountains. But because of the bad weather coming from the north side of the Jura, we needed to change the programme. Thanks to the good organisation we were able to do something else. The new plan was to fly over the region with our three guides with three planes which divided our group in three. We departed from Grenchen airport and flew along the three lakes to Lausanne. It was a beautiful flight next to the Jura. We landed there to have a small drink before continuing our flight to Bern. Before we landed we made a 360° turn over the city of Bern! Wonderful to see from the air! We landed and changed a third time. It was very nice to sit in the front. We were even allowed to take control over the plane which was very cool. After landing in Grenchen, we ate a nice hamburger before going to the hostel, where we were offered some spaghetti, so we ate a second time -> nice!

Sitting outside with a nice beer in the moonlight thinking and writing about the nice day was the best way to finish our day!
